Before we delete our item, let me show you something. It is our special feature, the notifications feature. The main purpose of our program is to prevent spoilage of foods and here it is. As you can see, the expiry date of our item below is on June 24, 2021, and today is June 19, 2021. You just simply enter a number from the notifications panel on the right portion of the program. It indicates the number of days that a product will expire from the date today. Example, you typed the number '5', and today is June 19, then that means, the notifications warning panel will display all the products that will expire five days from now, and that five days is until June 24. It is like a range. If you type 10, then the warning panel will display all the products that will expire from today, up to 10 days after.

What about the notifications expiry panel? It has nothing to do with the number indicator on the upper right portion. When an item's expiry date is now passed the date today, it will now show as an expired product. It will also view all the products that is expired from the date today. To demonstrate this, first, let's add a product with an expiry date of June 15. Keep note that today is June 19.

Now, to delete a product, simply type in the ID of the product and hit “Search”, then the program will display the contents of the product. It may look like a text field just like from the “View Products” tab, but it’s not editable, even if you try to manipulate it, it is just for reading only. This will help you know the contents of the product that you’re trying to delete so you can think twice before deleting it. Then, just hit the “Delete item” button below to delete the item completely.
